During the Great Recession the USA nationalized two-thirds of its Automobile Industry by blowing-off bond holders and lurched towards socialism—while evoking the mantra "A Crisis is a terrible thing to waste".

Many eminent economists are also physicists making them particularly facile with numbers. When pondering their conclusions, you have to ask how their worldviews and those of their peers have influenced their calculus. I turn cautious when the subject is endogenous growth, but become extremely skeptical when fossil fuels and climate change enter the debate. A case in point is Solyndra.
